I thought Death on the Black Sea by Douglas Frantz was an extremely interesting book. It reminds me of today and how politics and power get in the way of humanity and doing what is right. The Jewish people on the Struma did not have to die. I can not believe the ship was pulled out into the Black Sea with a disabled engine and set adrift.

The Turks, when they came to control the lands beyond the sea's southern shores, encountered only the sudden storms whipped up on its waters and reverted to a designation reflecting the inhospitable aspect of what they now termed the Karadeniz, or Black Sea. To scientists, the Black Sea is a remarkable feature because its lower levels are, to all intents and purposes, almost biologically dead—not because of pollution but because of continued weak ventilation of the deep layers.
