This New Selected Poems by Mark Strand arrives twenty-five years after his last Selected and explains everything. It is a most impressive introduction to a significant poet. The poems from the early books are typically dark and mysterious; they breathe a natural surrealism that is as different from Lorca's manner as the New World is from the Old.

Mark Strand's book of New Selected Poems taught me the value there is in constantly varying structure and tone to keep the reader entertained and on their toes. I also learned that building a rich, imaginative setting for the poem can be a great, effective setup for the metaphor or message of the poem, as this is a technique Strand uses frequently in New Selected Poems.

Strand's poems are characterised by an obsession with his own person and its accoutrements. In "The Man in the Mirror", the story of Orpheus and Eurydice is reenacted with Strand as Orpheus and his own reflection in a mirror as his lost love: the speaker relates how "days passed / and I would rest / my cheek against the glass, / wanting nothing but the old you..."
